The Big Five

When colonial-era hunters descended on Africa in the late 1800s, they were on a quest for adventure and the “trophy” of taking home one of what became known as the Big Five — the Cape buffalo, African savanna elephant, leopard, lion and black rhinoceros. In addition to being deemed the most dangerous, these five African mammal species were considered the most challenging to capture.

Of course, the thrill of the modern safari is to witness these spectacular creatures in their natural habitat — photographing some of the most awesome wildlife on the planet. Keep your cameras and binoculars ready for Big Five game viewing and bird watching on our land safaris at acclaimed private game reserves and through Chobe National Park, followed by a three-day cruise down the Chobe River to the edge of Namibia.
